Andrea Monson from Monsoon Roastery spearheads the event out of love for the arts and the city. She said; “We've curated this group of talented vendors to create the perfect opportunity for the community to support small businesses and find one-of-a-kind gifts.”

The Monsoon Roastery is part of the Urban Food Brood (a culinary and restaurant collective) which makes its home at Gasoline Alley and will serve its diverse food and drink offerings at the market, including a new plant-based food truck, Wicked Whisk.

Ashley Ripolone from Ash Rips Pottery has been a Kringle Market vendor from the beginning. “The Kringle Market is one makers market I look forward to all year! As an artist and small business, it's such a great feeling when you find a community that is as supportive as the Gasoline Alley family. Watching this collaboration unfold has been incredible, I feel lucky to be a vendor at this event!”

Another third-time vendor is photographer, Nichele Herrick from Derelict Depictions. Among the many reasons she loves the Kringle Market is the camaraderie among the vendors. "Being able to meet fellow artists who have a unique way of approaching art is wonderful. Meeting new people as well as reconnecting with colleagues has also been great. The Kringle Market has helped my photography business 10-fold, more than any other art market I have attended."

Gasoline Alley is a 501c3 non-profit business incubator concentrating on socially responsible and sustainable business practices. Its campus and headquarters are located at 250-270 Albany Street in Springfield, Massachusetts.
