"I believe Alan Jackson said it best, 'Doin' what I love and loving what I do'", states Gaskin. "Country music rattles my bones and a song like "Accidentally Drunk" hits me right where a country song is supposed to."

Till I started thinking 'bout you Wondering where you're at

Jump in the truck
Drive too fast
Don't get far
End up at the bar
Put it in park
And that's where it starts
With a two finger pour
Telling this glass of tequila
I'm only drinking till I don't need ya
But oh, the next thing I know
The suns coming up
And I'm accidentally drunk

About Bradley Gaskin

Singer-songwriter, Bradley Gaskin, signed with Columbia Nashville in 2010 and released his debut single, "Mr. Bartender", a solo penned track. His single charted on country radio for 20 weeks leading him to a Top 40 country hit. As a writer, his network continued to grow with Bradley landing cuts with Sammy Kershaw and gospel acts. Soon after his success, Columbia's direction shifted, and Bradley was released from his contract. He put down his Gibson J45 for a few years and took up work in construction and at a local elementary school in his hometown of Duck Springs, Alabama. Bradley could have settled into a normal life, but he knew that wasn't what he was supposed to be doing. When Jack Cole, a seasoned friend, offered him the deal of a lifetime, Bradley jumped at the idea to get back in the studio. "Why don't we record the music you want to write," said Jack. Jack then started 30A Life Records, sealing the deal with Bradley Gaskin as his very first signed artist. Bradley is currently tracking his first full-length record in over a decade with Grammy award-winning producer, Keith Stegall.
