EINPresswire.com/ -- In an exciting new chapter for adaptive sports, Team Some Assembly Required, a renowned 501c3 Non-Profit Organization, is delighted to announce its strategic expansion. This expansion marks a new path forward in the organization's commitment to adaptive sports and athletics. Team Some Assembly Required, founded by veterans Dale King and Derick Carver, has been a pivotal force in promoting adaptive fitness, camaraderie, and competition among adaptive athletes.

With this expansion, Team Some Assembly Required welcomes new board members Mark S. Harris, Josh Hicks, and Shannon Ogar. They join the existing team, which includes Dale King and Josh Cinnamo, bringing fresh perspectives and renewed energy to the organization's mission. This blend of continuity and innovation ensures that the core values of confidence, independence, and purpose continue to drive the organization's efforts.

"Team Some Assembly Required is entering an exciting era of growth and opportunity," says Mark S. Harris, a key supporter and newly appointed board member. "Our expansion is more than just a structural change; it's a reaffirmation of our commitment to the adaptive sports community. We're stepping up to meet the growing needs of these remarkable athletes and to foster a more inclusive sporting world. The impact of what we do goes beyond the gym - it touches every aspect of daily life for these athletes. Our mission is to shine a light on this incredible sport and the profound, often unimaginable ways it transforms lives."

As part of its growth, Team Some Assembly Required is enhancing its collaboration with various entities in the adaptive sports community, including WheelWOD, to amplify its impact. This strategic alignment aims to further the reach and efficacy of programs supporting adaptive athletes.
