to curate a delightful selection of treats, apparel, accessories, and ornaments that are tasty, health-conscious, sustainable, practical, beautiful and/or stylish. And importantly, these products are from conscientious, independent companies that are committed to serving the dog-loving community. You won't find many of these unique products in the big-box pet superstores.

“Farm to Pet is part of a community of independent pet-related companies who produce unique products that are good for pets and the environment,” said Miranda Jones, who leads the marketing and business development efforts of Farm to Pet. “The goal of our Holiday Gift Guide is to raise the visibility of these brands and their missions. Together, we aim to grow our communities of pet lovers—product developers and pet owners—who care about the health and wellness of our pets. So, this autumn, we reached out to these brands to collaborate on a holiday gift guide showcasing many of our unique and fun products for pet owners as well as their friends and family members.”

So, let's dig into the canine wonderland of Farm to Pet's Holiday Gift Guide and explore the
