For many, however, the winter holidays are simply something to survive. With that in mind, there is usually a reward at the end of it all and that may be a trip on Cunard's latest ship, the Queen Anne, that launches in May 2024 and features an onboard journey to Broadway and the West End. Award-winning theater producer David Pugh has put his skills to work for the Queen Anne's maiden season with a uniquely adapted production of Noël Coward's "Brief Encounter," directed by Emma Rice. Travel-Intel has the details on this rewarding cruise and how to book it at a discount.

Travel is always changing, never the same, never staying still. We are the watchers. And that is why Travel-Intel is here.”

Lark Gould, Editor

Travel-Intel looks at the trends, the headlines, the places to travel, the trips to take, the airports to avoid and how to travel comfortably and safely in a fast-changing world.

The stories in Travel-Intel also looks at new extended stay options in La La Land, otherwise known as LA. And they also look at where to find cool comforts and fine hospitality on an adventurous, if not arduous, journey through Darwin and Arnhem Land along Australia's Top End.

Also learn where luxury travelers are heading and what kinds of trips they are taking, according to wealth travel advisors at Virtuoso. Then find out why U.S. hotel rates are rising and what cities to avoid if nightly costs are of concern.

Finally, Travel-Intel looks at Mexico – make that the “heart” of Mexico -- for some intriguing and inspired travel that’s a little off the grid in the central state of Guanajuato. Visit a veritable museum of skeletons from Guanajuato City’s past that was featured in a horror story written decades ago by Ray Bradbury? Find out about the trails of wine, spirits and even cheese along the mountain villages that dot these historic lands.

It’s all on Travel-Intel – no firewalls, no subscriptions. The publication is written by travel industry journalists and focuses on changing trends in travel. Stories come from a variety of places and perspectives, including inside track information from travel industry conferences and expos, or first-person experiences at popular hotels, reports from exotic resorts, cruise ships and ports, and first-hand explorations of destinations near and far. Monthly newsletters are sent to travel advisors globally. Current issues and archives can be viewed at www.travel-intel.com.

“Travel is always changing, never the same, never staying still,” says Lark Gould, editor at Travel-Intel. “We are the watchers and we are always on the road to bring in the news, the details, the things travelers -- and those who book those trips -- need to know. Travel is a passion, whether you are the traveler or you are the industry practitioner. And that is why Travel-Intel is here.”

As a veteran travel journalist who has been covering the travel industry for nearly 40 years, Lark Gould puts her incisive perspective into regular travel features and news updates, and great travel deals to be found at hotels and resort locations worldwide for a variety of travel publications.
