Mark Jensen

Mark Jensen, CEO of ReElement Technologies commented, “The global expansion of our technology provides a real opportunity to increase our critical mineral production base, while also displacing toxic legacy refining methods. The deployment of our advanced refining technology in Africa will enable us to supply material volumes of high-purity critical and rare earth minerals to our domestic markets while also benefiting the local environment and economies. Over the past few years, we have built incredible relationships throughout the African continent, and having the proper structure in place to move quickly is paramount to our strategy and is well aligned with the aspects of how we deploy and scale our modular platform. We look forward to sharing future updates on specific partnerships for both in-country processing in Africa, as well as supplying our previously announced Kentucky Lithium site, where we are able to leverage our vast ownership of mining infrastructure in the east Appalachia corridor to repurpose for lithium refining.”

ReElement Africa's structure provides the Company an efficient platform to incentivize and capitalize each local division and its partners in a way that best benefits local and regional stakeholders while also capitalizing each division at the local level. The Company will form local entities under the ReElement Africa umbrella based on each partnership that is in place
