

Republican Candidate, Michael Corbin, Opposed to proposed Georgia 7th District Congressional Map

Once again voters of Georgia's 7th Congressional District are used as political pawns - left confused and abandoned.

PEACHTREE CORNERS, GA, UNITED STATES, December 6, 2023
/EINPresswire.com/ -- Michael Corbin, Republican Candidate representing Georgia's 7th Congressional District, is opposed to the newly proposed Congressional maps that would drastically impact the voters of his community.

"What I see in the newly proposed map is disappointing. I disagree with the proposed maps and will stand on record with that statement. I am standing up for the voters of the current 7th Congressional District, which is comprised mostly of Gwinnett County, the second largest county in population in the state of Georgia at one million residents. I understand that the Georgia State Assembly is under legal order to re-draw the maps, which would comply with U.S. District Judge Steve Jones' recent order. However, we must take common sense into consideration when it comes to geography. The people in Gwinnett County felt the brunt of the changes in 2022 and once again with the newly proposed maps. People should know what geographical boundaries make up their district, as those boundaries represent actual communities, with real people. While it may not be illegal, it is simply wrong to confuse voters and continue to play the shell game. Voters are not pawns to be used for political advantage. I will support whatever the outcome and make decisions after Judge Jones makes his ruling to accept the new maps in partial or full."

Corbin's previous run in 2022, he won the Republican Primary in May 2022 with 42% of the vote (18,637 votes), but lost the Primary runoff in June 2022, primarily due to low voter turnout. Michael Corbin vowed to not have a repeat and fully expect to outright win the Republican Primary slated for May 21, 2024, and unseat Lucy Mcbath (D) in November 2024.
