She answered the question about Jewish students at Harvard. It is her duty to keep all students safe including our Jewish brothers and sisters. Words failed her at the moment of the question and she acknowledges it. She said "I am sorry." Dr. Gay said in a subsequent interview with the Crimson, Harvard's campus newspaper. "When words amplify distress and pain, I don't know how you could feel anything but regret."

NBCI asks that we please take her at her word. This was a learning experience for her and for Harvard and they will do better in the future. It is human to err. The moral crisis is when one refuses to correct their mistake.
