Regional Analysis of the Connected Worker Market:

North America accounted for the largest market in the connected worker market. North America accounted for the 37% market share of the Global market value. Given the existence of multiple connected worker solution providers and the adoption of cutting-edge technology by field workers, North America is predicted to be a significant customer region. Additionally, the presence of important end consumers who were eager to adopt hardware and software solutions gave industry players in the area attractive prospects. One of the key nations with rapid technological adoption is the US. The increased demand for connected worker solutions is mostly due to the rollout of 5G infrastructure, the adoption of IoT technologies, and Silicon Valley backing. One of the main shipping behemoths, DHL, has offered support for wearable technology. The business found that wearable watches boost worker productivity, which increased by 25% as a result of wearable technology.

China's market for connected worker solutions is anticipated to grow at an exceptional rate throughout the projected period. Since the world's largest industrial institutions are eager to implement connected worker solutions, China, which is known as the heart of manufacturing, is predicted to rule the sector over the next 10 years. Future demand for connected worker solutions is also anticipated to increase due to the nation's expanding use of smart manufacturing techniques.
