Veterinary Initiative for Endangered Wildlife (VIEW)

VIEW is a nonprofit conservation organization focused on addressing health threats as part of a comprehensive strategy for protecting endangered wildlife populations around the world. VIEW's approach is strategic and straightforward: It supports locally sustainable wildlife disease investigation, prevention, and treatment by providing training, tools and technology, research, as well as policies that ensure healthy environments for wildlife and the people and domestic animals that share their habitat.

VIEW seeks to make a global impact on wildlife health by strategically choosing the regions in which it works – considering the biodiversity and the number of critically endangered species in the region, as well as the potential to partner with government and local agencies to create a sustainable wildlife conservation program. VIEW is currently active in three regions: North America, Africa, and Asia.
