Kim Lowell, Create Joy client

What's goal-oriented transformational travel?

According to the Transformational Travel Council, with which Create Joy has partnered through the development of their process, “Transformational travel is any travel experience that empowers people to make meaningful, lasting changes in their life. Ultimately, it’s a philosophy on travel that connects travelers to their truest self and others, cultivating a sense of purpose and belonging.” Create Joy looks to do just that within their goal-oriented process by inspiring, motivating, educating, and preparing travelers to take a trip that creates a lasting impact on their lives.

By setting goals and intentions, whether individually or for a shared group travel experience, travelers create a purpose a method of motivation, and perform accountability check-ins that will help them reach their desired outcomes. This “New You” travel might look like immersing yourself in a language, taking deeper dives into art and cultures, achieving a trek or elevation, or learning a new mindfulness practice to find inner peace.

In addition to self-development, Create Joy’s itineraries focus on traveling sustainably, considering the impact of travel on local cultures and environments while assuring that trip experiences are vetted through their network of ethically responsible partners. Create Joy also looks to promote off-peak travel as a way to reduce impact on local communities.

Create Joy’s mission is to empower people through meaningful and transformative travel experiences that foster joy, connection, and personal growth. By allowing travelers to explore the world through personalized itineraries that best fit their individual needs, Create Joy strives to empower them with a refreshed perspective on life. With this unique approach and vision, Create Joy is dedicated to creating unforgettable journeys of discovery where you can find yourself again and create a better self for the future.
