A computer- or smartphone-controlled robot known as a telepresence robot gives you an alien presence; aside from touching objects, the person is “on location.” The phrase “Skype on wheels” is frequently used to describe telepresence robots. Telepresence robots, however, provide more options. For example, the organizer of the robot may control what the robot desires to observe instead of needing someone to aim a camera at a specific person (as is the case with Skype and other video conferencing services).
