North America is the largest market for green and bio-solvents. It has been a pioneer in terms of demand, product innovation, and the creation of applications. The US, which commands a sizable portion of the North American market, together with Canada and Mexico, are the important nations. Although it is a small market, Mexico has seen encouraging demand, which is anticipated to continue soon. Government authorities and businesses in North America are being compelled by consumer demand for greener solvents to switch from petrochemical-based solvents to bio-solvents. Also, the rising availability of raw materials and the presence of significant manufacturers in North America can be largely blamed for the market's expansion. The increase in demand for bio-solvents in North America, which is supported by rising consumer awareness and ongoing product innovation in terms of quality and application development, is another factor contributing to the regional market's expansion.
