Korea Times article about KCSC seminar taught by Minji Kim, lawyer in Virginia.

People who went through a divorce often wonder, “Circumstances changed, what should I do now?” Such changes in circumstances include major fluctuations in income or expenses, the situation of children, and the issue of retirement benefits. During her seminar, she explained the general issues, such as what the first steps are, how long it takes, and what to watch for in particular. There are also opportunities for participants to ask questions of Ms. Kim. Even though she consistently answers the questions based on the available facts, she always advises the participants that actionable legal advice requires a review of the file and an in-depth consultation.

served as a Management Board member at the International Center for Law and Religion Studies at Brigham Young University. In her first position after graduating from law school, Ms. Kim worked at the Asian Pacific American Legal Resource Center (APALRC) in Washington, D.C., where she provided legal services to low-income individuals and families.

Noted Minji Kim, "Teaching these seminars and helping affected parties is most rewarding volunteer work. While I am happily married with children, I feel for those whose relationship failed and who try to make the best of their post-divorce situation. Sometimes the circumstances are heart-breaking when children are involved. So, I try what I can to help them resolve such issues as efficiently and cost-effectively as humanly possible. While I cannot see all these problem issues through until there is a resolution, I can at least help these parties to get on the path toward a resolution."
