Acrylonitrile refer to an organic compound with the formula CH2CHCN. Acrylonitrile (CH2=CHCN) is a toxic, colorless, pale-yellow liquid. Acrylonitrile is primarily used as a raw material in the manufacture of acrylic and modacrylic fibers. Other important applications include plastics (acrylonitrile-butadiene-styrene (ABS) and styrene-acrylonitrile (SAN)), nitrile rubbers, nitrile barrier resins, adiponitrile, and acrylamide.

The main applications of acrylonitrile are acrylic fiber, adiponitrile, styrene-acrylonitrile, acrylonitrile butadiene styrene, acrylamide, carbon fiber, nitrile rubber, and others. Acrylic fibers are soft and stretchy, resulting in lightweight, lofty yarns. Acrylic fiber refers to the material made from acrylonitrile that is used as a replacement for wool in clothing and carpets. It is generally referred to as a flexible and adaptable fiber that produces fluffy and light yarns. These characteristics resemble wool quite closely. The different end-users include automotive, electrical and electronics, construction, packaging, and others.
