April 30, 2020: You can express culture in so many different ways, whether it's through clothing, rituals, or language. And for us at Dang, the way we most closely identify with our heritage is—no shocker here—through food. After all, everything started with Mama Dang's recipe for toasted coconut chips. "I found food to be a way to embrace my identity in a relatable way," says Dang founder Vincent Kitirattragarn. "People would say, 'I love Thai food' when finding out about my heritage and wax poetic about their favorite dish. It was an easy way to feel connected to others so I leaned into it and ended up doing a Thai pop-up restaurant in SF that led to Dang."
