"We're very excited for people to see this wonderful family mystery," Donovan from Purdie Distribution said, "because it isn't just a fun movie adventure for people of any age, but it also has some very educational topics that really need to be discussed, like animal conservation and protection and anti-poaching themes but even has some important things to say about racial profiling. It's refreshing to see these mature themes in a mystery adventure for the whole family."

Thabo and the Rhino Case is about eleven-year-old Thabo, who wants to become a private detective like in the movies. If only his home, the small African village of Hlatikulu, was not the most peaceful savannah paradise. Now it is up to Thabo and his new friend Emma from Germany to not only take care of the abandoned baby rhino but also investigate and capture the culprits.
