Big Game Sunday is sometimes called the food industry's Black Friday. It sees a significant increase in food delivery orders, with popular items including wings, pizza, and finger foods. It's a trend that showcases the convenience of having food brought directly to your door, allowing fans to focus on the game, the commercials, and the halftime show.

Wing Mania:

According to the National Chicken Council's annual Chicken Wing Report, in 2023, they projected Americans would eat 1.45 billion chicken wings during Big Game weekend. This is an increase of two percent, or 84 million more wings consumed than during the 2022 Big Game weekend.

Pizza Party Tradition:

Pizza is a perennial favorite during the Big Matchup, with the American Pizza Community stating that approximately 12.5 million pizzas were ordered on game day in 2017. It's a time-honored tradition that brings people together for a slice of the action.

Snack Stadium Spectacle:

Snack food sales jumped 10.5% to $616 million during football's favorite game in 2022. Some fans take their game day snacks to the next level by creating elaborate snack stadiums. These edible masterpieces often include a combination of chips, dips, pretzels, and other favorite snacks arranged as a football field.

Halftime Havens:

Order your food delivery in time for halftime entertainment. This is a prime time for snack consumption. Many viewers take advantage of the break to refill their plates.
