Definition:

Biochemical methane refers to methane gas produced through biological or biochemical processes. Methane (CH<sub>4</sub>) is a hydrocarbon gas and a potent greenhouse gas. It can be generated naturally in various environmental conditions, as well as through human activities. Biochemical methane production typically occurs through microbial activities in oxygen-deprived environments and involves the decomposition of organic matter.

Market Trends:

Growing concerns about climate change and a desire to reduce greenhouse gas emissions were driving increased demand for renewable energy sources, including biochemical methane.

Market Drivers:

The biochemical methane market is primarily driven by the global shift towards renewable energy sources and sustainable waste management.

Market Opportunities:

The increasing urbanization and industrialization in emerging markets, particularly in Asia and Latin America, are creating abundant sources of organic waste that can be harnessed for methane production.
