This newest episode will unveil an unprecedented look into the region's influential role in shaping the history of rock music – from the birthplace of iconic bands such as No Doubt and The Runaways to Elvis Presley's secret martial arts training site.

“It was thrilling to unearth so many of the county's hidden gems and surprising rock and roll revelations that we are excited to share in our second episode of OC History Hunters,” said Epting.

Other highlights include John Moorlach's interview with the curators at the Fender Museum Center providing an insider's perspective on the enduring legacy of Leo Fender, a pioneer in the development of the electric guitar. Additionally, Epting embarks on a quest to discover the remnants of the legendary Golden Bear nightclub, an iconic hotspot for live music in Huntington Beach. Renowned OC muralist Wyland also joins the program, making a special appearance to shed light on his personal contribution to the Golden Bear.

The episode will feature a major surprise revelation about the creation of one of rock 'n' roll's greatest classics, shedding light on Orange County's profound impact on the music industry.

"This show is a labor of love for both John and me," says Epting. "We're thrilled to have the opportunity to share Orange County's rich history with viewers and shed light on the remarkable stories that have often been overlooked. OC History Hunters' is our way of giving back to this incredible community and showcasing its extraordinary heritage."
