Rapid Urbanization: Catalyst for Market Growth

The surge in urbanization globally, particularly in countries like Indonesia, Vietnam, and the Philippines, is a pivotal factor fueling the demand for new residential buildings. As per the UN World Urbanization Prospects report, it is projected that over two-thirds (60%) of the world's population will reside in cities by 2050. Notably, Asian countries are witnessing substantial opportunities, driven by export-oriented manufacturing. The World Bank predicts a 250 million increase in the urban population in South Asia by 2030. This rapid urbanization is anticipated to propel the land planning and development market by fostering demand for new infrastructure.

Resident Population Growth: Shaping Land Development

The expanding resident population is a driving force behind the growth of the land planning and development market. The resident population, a key influencer of land utilization trends and housing demand, plays a pivotal role in shaping land development. For example, the United States, as per the Census Bureau, experienced a 0.4% population increase in 2022, reaching a total of 333,287,557 individuals. This growth, following a period of low rates, underscores the significant impact of the resident population on the land planning and development sector.
