The PUPPY LOVE documentary produced by Cerise Films of Chicago is an involving and inspiring documentary written and directed by Gail Gilbert. The movie will screen at a special presentation on Tuesday, February 20, at 4 p.m. as part of February Fun Week, at the American Kennel Club Museum of the Dog in New York. "A healthy litter of purebred pups suddenly become paralyzed and the vets say they should be euthanized," explains writer-director Gilbert. The documentary <https://puppylovefilm.com/about>

This film evolved organically because from one day to the next, we had no idea if the puppies would survive or even walk again."

Gail Gilbert, filmmaker

follows a literal "life and death" struggle to bring these puppies back to health. Chicken soup and natural foods, including Darwin's Natural Pet Products, are used to nurse the pups as they overcome the odds of temporary paralysis.

"A courageous group of women rally together to fight for their pets' survival and amazing things happen!" said Gilbert who owns one of the Labs involved and shows her dog today. "Puppy Love is more than a movie about dogs; it's a universal story about the power of love and commitment in everything we do."

The documentary feature film follows this loveable litter of puppies that overcome impossible odds to survive and thrive. The film is an inspiring testimony to the perseverance and dedication of both the rescuers and the spunky dogs: Red, Scout, Shooter and Oliver. It is "The feel-good movie of the year," according to celebrated author Dorothy Marks.

Gilbert explains, "This film evolved organically because from one day to the next, we had no idea if the puppies would survive or even walk again." But the cast and crew donated their time in the hope that the story would have a happy ending.
