In her position, Rehtoris will play a key role in engaging the e-discovery community through producing workshops that allow participants to share best practices, grow their networks, elevate their careers, and advance the e-discovery industry.

Rehtoris brings both a passion and background for community building, having spent several years in the e-discovery space. Her experience and excitement for building communities through programs and content aligns with EDRM's commitment to improving e-discovery, privacy, security, and information governance through consensus-based work product.

“We are thrilled to have Mary join us in furthering our mission to advance e-discovery, a community and practice that we are all deeply connected to,” said Kaylee Walstad, chief strategy officer, EDRM. “We look forward to her partnership in helping us continue to build authentic and meaningful connections.”

In addition to programming quarterly workshops, Mary will explore avenues to drive EDRM's mission to educate and elevate the e-discovery community through thought leadership articles, research initiatives, and more.

"It's such an honor to immerse myself once again in the exciting e-discovery world," said Rechteris. "Mary and Kaylee have been instrumental in helping me advance as a professional and human being, as they've done for countless others. I can't wait to collaborate with them on growing the e-discovery community."

"It's been wonderful watching Mary evolve as a marketer, community builder, and strategist over the past few years," said Mary Mack, chief legal technologist & CEO, EDRM. "I look forward to having her as an integral part of the team to help us continue to serve our enthusiastic and unique e-discovery community."
