Definition:

Travel accident insurance is a specialized type of travel insurance plan. It acts as life insurance and it is insurance against accidental death and dismemberment in the case of a travel accident. The benefits are paid regardless of whether the traveler has other AD&D coverage and life insurance. Moreover, some of the insurance plans also cover emergency medical expenses. Limited insurance plans give the maximum reimbursements range to choose from and several are designed specifically for the regular business traveler and include coverage for non-medical emergency evacuations. Business travel can be defined as the traveling performed for the purpose of business between two or more parties. Some of the examples of business travel are traveling from one branch to another branch of the same company, traveling to different locations for meeting any suppliers or business partners, and traveling for a business conference or business event across different locations. Business travel accident insurance is an important benefit for many companies, particularly those with employees who frequently travel internationally on company business.
