Jason Adams, IFA Director of Operations United States and Mexico. The league aims to kick off in 2025 with ten teams. Each team will feature 53 players plus seven practice squad members. Teams are limited to 20 American players, with the rest required to be from Mexico or other international countries. The league is committed to promoting and developing football infrastructure across Mexico.

"We have always had a passion for football here at Right

Now TV. Our viewers can't get enough of football, so we are thrilled to partner with the IFA to make this new international league a reality," said Right Now TV CEO Rob Coker. "This is legit 11 on 11 outdoor pro football in great venues. We can't wait for it to kick off."

"This partnership represents a significant milestone for the International Football Alliance as we strive to bring the excitement of our league to fans around the world," said Jason Adams, Director of Operations at IFA.

In addition to broadcasting regular and postseason games, Right Now TV will broadcast and stream coaching clinics and team tryouts, providing an inside look at the development of players, coaching strategies, and the overall growth of the league provided by the IFA. This behind-the-scenes access is designed to give fans an opportunity to bond with the league's players and coaches, discover the teams, and develop an early appreciation for the league's unique brand of football.
