Regional Analysis

With the greatest market share in the worldwide dental implants market in 2022, North America may be ascribed to rising consumer affordability, medical tourism, and cross-border treatment, as well as high-quality dental care. People from other countries come to North America for dental operations and other medical tourism. A rising number of people are seeking dental implant procedures as a result of the high caliber of healthcare in North America and the advancement of dental technologies. Because of the growing desire for long-term solutions and the trends in restorative dentistry, the U.S. market held the greatest revenue share in 2022. Additionally, throughout the forecast period, the growing tendency in restorative dentistry towards implant-supported treatments is anticipated to propel the expansion of this region's market revenue. Both dental professionals and patients are realizing the long-term benefits and robustness of implant-supported restorations.

Due to growing public awareness of the need for better dental care, Europe is anticipated to have a sizable market position in the worldwide dental implants market throughout the projected decade. European nations are renowned for their superior dental care standards. The emphasis on high-quality dental care and the accessibility of qualified dental specialists have helped to foster a favorable public impression of dental implant operations. Mergers and acquisitions to strengthen current capabilities are another driver propelling this region's market revenue growth. For example, in January 2020, Dental Systems Oy (Dental Systems) and GAMA Dental AB (GAMA Dental) were fully acquired by Unindent AB (Unindent), a portfolio firm inside the Triton Smaller Mid Cap Fund (TSM).
