SHERIDAN, WYOMING, UNITED STATE, January 31, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ --

In the Asia Pacific region, the price trend of polybutadiene rubber fluctuated initially due to weak automotive market sentiments but later inclined in the second quarter with growth in the pharmaceutical and automotive sectors. In Europe, prices declined in both quarters due to weak tire industries, decreasing energy prices, and reduced production costs. In North America, prices fluctuated due to reduced production in the automotive sector, low demand from construction, and increased inventory levels. Overall, the performance of polybutadiene rubber prices in these regions was influenced by various sector-specific factors throughout the first and second quarters of 2023.

Definition

Polybutadiene rubber (PBR) is a synthetic elastomer made from polymerizing butadiene monomers. It is a type of synthetic rubber with high resilience, exceptional flexibility, and good abrasion resistance. PBR possesses excellent low-temperature flexibility, making it suitable for cold weather applications. Its key properties include high tensile strength, tear resistance, and impact resistance, making it valuable for manufacturing tires, conveyor belts, seals, gaskets, and various automotive and industrial products. Moreover, PBR exhibits good resistance to chemicals and is highly elastic, allowing it to recover its shape after deformation, making it ideal for applications requiring flexibility and durability.
