In a groundbreaking and raw narrative, Howard D. Blazek takes readers on an unfiltered journey through the corridors of the mind with his book, "The Change Center". This compelling first-person narrative unfolds within the confines of a closed psychiatric ward, offering an unvarnished glimpse into an individual's struggle with madness.

Howard D. Blazek's narrative unfolds over the course of a week spent within the confines of the psychiatric ward, offering an accurate and factual portrayal of an individual's struggle with mental health. What sets the 264-page book apart is its commitment to authenticity, as the author shares his experiences without fictionalization, embellishment, or exaggeration. The journey begins during Blazek's confinement, where the initial draft of the book took shape. Over the subsequent six months following his release from the ward, the foundation of the narrative was laid. The manuscript underwent meticulous revisions over the years, culminating in its completion only now.

The Change Center

"The Change Center" challenges societal perceptions surrounding mental health by presenting a candid and unapologetic exploration of one person's madness. Howard D. Blazek's willingness to share his story without fictional trappings adds an authentic layer that will resonate with readers seeking a genuine understanding of mental health challenges.

In a world where the plight of animals has too often been relegated to the shadows, Beth A. Nigro's latest book, "The Call From Within", emerges as a poignant call to action. The narrative, centered around the urgent need to address animal cruelty, not only unveils the silent suffering of creatures of various kinds and sizes but also presents a pathway toward a more compassionate existence.

Author Beth A. Nigro delves into the neglected concerns surrounding animal welfare with a keen sense of purpose. Drawing from the collective voices of devoted witnesses to animal cruelty, "The Call From Within" ignites a desire for a world where peace and justice prevail and where the voiceless find advocates in those who care. At the heart of the book lies a compelling exploration of the "Crisis of Cruelty" that compels readers to confront the ethical issues surrounding our treatment of animals. Through the lens of "Deborah," the prophetess who grapples with the divide between species, the author skillfully guides readers to reflect on their own relationships with animals and the broader implications for wildlife. Beth A. Nigro's journey to becoming an advocate for animal rights is reflected in her academic background. Graduating with a Master's Degree from Fordham University in New York, Nigro specialized in the philosophy of animal rights. Her master's essay, "The Gulf Between Us: An Essay of the Human and Non-Human in Western Philosophical Thought" intricately weaves together the threads of animal rights, feminist perspectives, and the origins of dualist thinking.
