Drivers:

The expansion of the global concrete and cement market is supported by several key factors. Increasing population growth and urbanization are acting as a catalyst and boosting the rise in residential construction projects. In addition, increased government allocations for road construction initiatives and urban renewal projects will further boost market growth in the foreseeable future.

The flourishing retail landscape also offers lucrative opportunities for market expansion. Nevertheless, the market may encounter challenges arising from the inherent limitations of concrete, particularly its lower ductility and the presence of soluble salts that can lead to efflorescence, thereby dampening growth prospects.
