According to Russell, one of the most common mistakes people make when it comes to tree care is waiting until it's too late to address issues. "Many people don't realize that dying trees or tree limbs are more sturdy and flexible than dead ones are. Trees or limbs which are already dead are more brittle and therefore pose additional hazards (and therefore, cost) to remove them. Tree owners can save a good deal of money by removing dying trees or limbs rather than waiting for the to die because our team has greater maneuverability when removing them."

Russell's advice expounds on the advantages of prudent preventative tree service. "If you look up into the tree and you see a dead branch or a hanging branch, get it taken care of now. Don't wait because it'll cost you a home insurance claim when it falls and hits your house, not to mention, it's a safety hazard."

In addition to safety concerns, Russell also emphasizes the importance of maintaining the health of your trees, but doing so in a cost-effective way. "Instead of fertilizing you might get a load of free wood chips and distribute them 3 inches deep in a radius around the base of the tree to help hold in the uppermost layer of topsoil. That's a good, cheap way to sort of sidestep fertilization because it will break down and add nutrients to the soil, which extends the health and life of the trees and prevents them from becoming hazardous. By investing in the health of your trees now, you can save money in the long run by avoiding the need for costly removals or treatments."

Russell also recommends consulting with a professional arborist, like himself, to perform annual triage to assess the condition of your trees and create a customized plan for your budget. "Every property is unique and requires a personalized approach to tree care," he says. "By working with a knowledgeable, experienced, and ISA-certified arborist like myself, you can ensure that your 2024 tree service budget is used effectively and efficiently."
