accelerate fat loss, reduce health risks, and establish habits for lifelong maintenance.

What the general public needs to understand is that “health” is equivalent to ‘weight.” When losing weight, however, clients typically have more energy to engage in physical activities that may not have been enjoyable with excess weight on the body. When clients see the body change, it creates a healthy domino effect, helping clients make better choices- whether food-related or activity-minded.

"Getting healthy is as much a mental journey as a physical one," noted Nancy, a client at Coastal Medical and Vitality. "People need to replace negative self-talk with self-compassion so they feel empowered instead of defeated by setbacks. With the right mindset, clients stay motivated throughout the process and beyond."

Coastal Medical and Vitality helps clients monitor progress. With body composition analysis, fitness assessments, and activity tracking to monitor progress objectively, it is much more of a visible journey to health. High-tech equipment like the InBody scanner measures changes in weight, body fat percentage, and muscle mass to ensure clients are losing fat and not muscle.
