One of the first things to consider is the timing of the move. While summer is a popular time for moves, it's also when moving companies tend to be busiest. To avoid delays or higher costs, plan to move in spring or fall if possible. Additionally, schedule moving day for the beginning of the month when fewer renters are relocating at once. While some moves have hard moving dates, others can be more flexible. Whenever possible, planning around busy times will save clients money.

When it comes to packing, start packing well in advance. Waiting until the last minute when stress levels rise can cause clients to feel the need to hire help. This will increase moving costs. Packing a few boxes each weekend leading up to the move allows the process to feel more manageable. Clearly label every box with its contents and the room it belongs in to help when arriving at the new location. Choosing the DIY route saves the moving company time and man hours. This, in turn, saves clients money. When packing fragile or valuable items, Best in Broward Movers suggests using appropriate materials like packing paper, bubble wrap, or newspaper to prevent breakage. Breaking items costs clients more money in the long run. Consider hiring professional movers for heavy furniture to avoid injury. Downsizing belongings is another way to save on moving costs. Have a pre-move yard sale or donate unused items.

Create an inventory of every item being moved and its corresponding box number. This ensures nothing gets left behind. Also, take pictures of electronics and mechanisms before disconnecting to reference later for reassembly. Change important account information to the new address. Be sure to include banks, employers, and service providers as soon as possible after the move date. Forward mail through the US Postal Service to receive bills and correspondence at the new home.
