the Club's 10th as a member of MLS, with the team having reached the postseason in four-consecutive seasons (2020-23), qualified for the Concacaf Champions Cup (formerly Concacaf Champions League) in both 2023 and 2024, and reached its first final in 2020 during the MLS is Back Tournament. In 2022, Orlando City won its first championship of its MLS era, lifting the Lamar Hunt U.S. Open Cup trophy, which also marked the first championship by any professional team in the City Beautiful. Prior to its time in MLS, Orlando City boasted a decorated history in the United Soccer League, winning the league's championship in both the 2011 and 2013 seasons. In October 2015, the Orlando Pride was announced as the 10th team in the National Women's Soccer League (NWSL), bringing professional women's soccer to the state of Florida for the first time. The team began play in April 2016, setting a then-league single-game attendance record in its first-ever home game, with 23,403 fans witnessing the Club's first win. The Pride features a star-studded roster of domestic and international talent, captained by Brazilian legend Marta, a six-time Women's World Player of the Year and the all-time leader in Women's World Cup goals. Former Orlando City defender Seb Hines serves as the team's head coach, the first Black head coach in league history. In 2017, both teams moved into its privately-owned, soccer-specific venue – INTER&CO Stadium – located in the heart of downtown Orlando. In July 2021, the Club – which includes Orlando City SC, the Orlando Pride, Orlando City B (MLS NEXT Pro) and INTER&CO Stadium – was purchased by the Wilf Family, who also own the Minnesota Vikings of the National Football League.
