Regional Market Analysis

North America dominated the market and contributed 37.8% of worldwide revenue in 2021 as a result of the industrial dynamism and abundant supply of commodities in its nations. The existence of a sizable senior population in developed nations like the U.S. and Canada, an advanced healthcare infrastructure, and patients with comparatively higher disposable income levels are some key factors driving the region's healthcare market.

The demand for products in Europe is anticipated to be driven by the region's developed medical infrastructure and rising healthcare costs. Over the projection period, it is also projected that steady demand for minimally invasive and diagnostic equipment that uses medical tubes would boost market expansion.
