The Port Lands Flood Protection Project represents a significant initiative to safeguard Toronto's southeastern downtown from flooding, particularly in extreme weather events, by naturalizing the Don River's mouth and connecting it to Lake Ontario. The top video this week gives us a construction update on this project - one of Toronto's largest infrastructure projects ever. By creating two new river outlets, excavating a kilometer-long river valley, and constructing a new river mouth, the project also encompasses the remediation of polluted land, the construction of new infrastructure including roads, bridges, and public trails, and the creation of 25 hectares of accessible greenspace and parkland.
