NEW YORK, NY, USA, March 11, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Every Woman Biennial, the female and non-binary art festival (originally launched as The Whitney Houston Biennial in 2014), presents its 5th edition, March 2-March 24, 2024, timing with Women's History Month and The Whitney Biennial, at La MaMa Galleria in downtown NYC. The theme and title is "I WILL ALWAYS LOVE YOU," and the Biennial features 200 artists selected from an open call to participate in a dynamic salon and performances.

The Every Woman Biennial is a cross-pollinated representation of artists working in a variety of mediums across generations (ranging in age from 14 to 83 years old), and racial and ethnic backgrounds. It is about discovery, community, and connection, presenting emerging and under-recognized artists, some having their first exhibition, alongside acclaimed feminist artists, including: Nadya Tolokonnikova (Pussy Riot), Swoon, Michele Pred, Liz Collins, Michelle Handelman, Phoebe Legere, and more. All are coming together in a wildly eclectic salon in a range of styles including painting, photography, installation, sculpture, video, multimedia, augmented reality, textile, music and performance. A new and very special addition to I Will Always Love You will be a section dedicated to personal objects and small art works donated by the participating artists – a crafted item, talisman, amulet, spell, found object, crow's gift, lover letter, etc. – sharing and honoring the joy, nostalgia, hope and pain of being human. All artworks in the exhibition are for sale, with the talismans each priced at $25, enabling everyone to take home an artwork or memento of the show.

Michele Pred's neon red heart surrounding a pink fist, "Love As Activism," lights up La MaMa's street window 24-hours a day setting the Biennial tone. Upon entering the exhibition, visitors are invited to be baptized in the Holy Rainbow Church of Matriarchy – Nadya Tolokonnikova's pink and glittered take on a holy fountain titled Holy Squirt, 2023. Themes of matriarchy, gender fluidity, social and racial justice, women's rights, and flipping the stereotypes of "women's work" are a focus of many artists' representations of their daily lives, bodies, desires, identities, and traumas; as well as immortalizing those they cherish – friends, lovers, mothers, grandmothers, mentors, and icons.

Danielle Scott's, Queen of Angels, 2021, a mixed media collage on a vintage ironing board, originally presented at the Museum of African Diaspora, is an homage to the 26-year long friendship with her mentor, the late Gladys Barker Grauer - artist, gallerist, activist and politician, who feared being forgotten.

Airco Caravan's humorous and conceptual work honors African-American icons – Harriet Tubman, Angela Davis, Rosa Parks – in Power

Trio, using spray cans and swapping consumerist labels for empowered portraits with witty activist slogans. Heroes closer to home and heart - mothers and grandmothers - are given recognition often neglected on gallery walls, in works such as Lifu Hu's photo series, Grandma, depicting her grandmother having the courage to break out of her introverted nature to play in ways that connect with the younger generation. Stacey Billups' oil painting, Aquinnah Cliffs, depicts the joy of a day at the beach shared with friends. Cara Erskine's pastoral abstract oil painting, Rainy Luncheon in the Studio Grass, 2021, features figures dressed in matching outfits that could allude to a kinship with teammates, or to different aspects of the self through moments in life, in her ethereal fantasy weaving together art historical references across time.

Political and social issues are creatively explored in layered storytelling of dark subject matter such as Izabella Demalvys', Saira, a portrait of one of Pakistan's female victims of brutal arson and acid attacks. Dominique Vitali's, Talia, is a delicately drawn and disturbing contemporary depiction of the original Sleeping Beauty story, written by Giambattista Basile in 1634, in which she is aroused out of a deep sleep by the babies born from the Prince's rape of her unconscious and unconsenting body. Caroline Voagen Nelson brings Lucy Burns - activist, jailed suffragette, and co-founder of the National Woman's Party - to life in the amazing augmented reality print, Her Vote: Lucy Burns.

Clothing, as armor or restraint, is examined in a range of ways, including embroidered aprons and slippers, and as a symbol of our consumerist destruction in Kat Ryals's cast glass croc, Sailors Slipper (Traharella), 2023. Multi-hyphenated artist Chanel Matsunami Govreau's convergence of wearable sculpture and gender expansiveness is presented through the soft armor of a wig in the photograph, i feel my most genderqueer in a wigcap. Side-by-side with figurative works are abstract and textile works including Fukuko Harris's brightly colored clay and mixed media sculpture reinventing pussy hats into earthy organic forms in Women's March. Suzanna Scott's Coin Cunts are a multi-colored symbol of empowerment and equality for all with a vulva, symbolically turning the ubiquitous object of a purse inside out, and challenging the misogynistic and racist culture in the U.S. Classical miniature embroidered, and embellished, portraits by Karina Majkut, titled Fair Play, subvert the toxic masculinity of vintage baseball cards by obscuring the identity, and making them more inclusive, ambiguous -and sparkling.

Short time-based media by 27 artists will play in a continuous loop, allowing visitors to quickly sample a number of videos, as well as longer works provided with a menu to allow visitors to select specific videos to view. Performance art and live music will continually enliven the Biennial, including a choir performance by Gaia Music Collective on opening day, and musical performances by Alison Clancy, La Galli, and more.
