growth is attributed to several factors, including the surge in demand for sustainable products in cosmetics and personal care, and the increase in demand of natural surfactants in the pharmaceutical industry. However, the high cost of production and limited availability hampered the market growth to some extent. On the other hand, a surge in demand for natural surfactants in the agriculture industry will offer various opportunities in the coming years.

Surfactants, commonly known as "natural surfactants" or "biosurfactants", are substances that interact with water or oil by reducing the surface tension of either a liquid or a solid. Natural surfactants are derived from a variety of natural sources, including plants and microorganisms, as well as marine organisms. Synthetic surfactants, on the other hand, are based on petrochemicals and are not biodegradable. Natural surfactants offer several benefits, such as being biodegradable, less toxic, and more sustainable.
