Currently, she is hard at work on a sequel to her debut novel, eager to continue the enthralling saga of Jasmine and Donovan. Their enduring love story holds a special place in her heart, and she is excited to delve deeper into their adventures. In addition to her work on "The Blue Orb" series, Vivian is also exploring new worlds and characters in her latest books, "Monsters in the Mist" and "Neberon Comes." The inspiration behind writing this book stems from a journey born from a lifelong love affair with literature and a challenge that sparked a new creative endeavor. As an avid reader, she has always found solace and excitement within the pages of science fiction and fantasy novels. Authors like J.R.R. Tolkien, Stephen King, Dean Koontz, George R.R. Martin, and Terry Pratchett have been her guiding lights, igniting her imagination and fueling her passion for the genre. While she would never dare to compare herself to these literary giants, they instilled in her a deep appreciation for storytelling and the power of the written word. Despite harboring a desire to write her own book, she hesitated to take the leap into the realm of authorship.

It was a challenge from her husband at the time that finally spurred her into action. Encouraged by his belief in her writing abilities, she decided to embrace the challenge and embark on the adventure of crafting her own novel. Drawing from her experiences as a student pursuing a Master's Degree at the University of Utah, she dove headfirst into the creative process. What ensued was a journey filled with excitement and discovery. As she delved into the world of "The Blue Orb," the story seemed to unfold before her, almost as if it had a life of its own. The tale of Jasmine and Donovan, their quest to save the world from evil, and the blossoming romance between them captivated her imagination and fueled her passion for storytelling.
