TRAVERSE CITY, MI, US, March 17, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- As the tax season rolls around, one of the most important pieces of information taxpayers need to find is their adjusted gross income (AGI). AGI is a key factor in determining tax liability and eligibility for certain tax credits and deductions.

Adjusted Gross Income on W2 Form

While it may seem like a daunting task to find this information, it can be quite simple if you know where to look. Here's a quick guide on how to find AGI on a W2.

First, it's important to understand what AGI is and why it matters. AGI is calculated by taking total income and subtracting certain deductions, such as contributions to retirement accounts and student loan interest payments. This number represents taxable income, which is used to determine the tax bracket and the amount of taxes owed.

To find the AGI on a W2, start by locating Box 1 - Wages, Tips, and Other Compensation. This box shows total taxable wages for the year, including any bonuses or commissions. Next, look for Box 12 - Deferred Compensation and Other Benefits. This box may contain codes that represent different types of deductions, such as contributions to a 401(k) or health savings account. If there are any of these codes, add them to the amount in Box 1 to get total income.

For any pre-tax deductions, such as contributions to a flexible spending account or health insurance premiums, subtract those from the total income to get the AGI. Look for Box 14 - Other on a W2 form, which may contain information about these deductions. If there is no information in Box 14, then contact the employer or HR department to get this information.

It's important to note that if there are multiple W2s, taxpayers need to add up the information from each one to get the total income and deductions. With this information, individuals can use it to file taxes or to apply for certain tax credits and deductions.
