The series will feature 12 films from countries such as Haiti, Bangladesh, Chad, Morocco, Samoa, Ethiopia, Australia, Tunisia, and the United States. These films explore a wide range of themes, including women's empowerment, social justice, cultural identity, and personal growth.

Highlights Include:

- "Survival of Kindness" – A gripping narrative of human compassion set against a dystopian backdrop.
- "Rediet's Coming Home" – A documentary that offers a poignant look at identity and belonging through the eyes of an 18-year-old returning to Ethiopia.
- "Raja Amari - A Feminist Filmmaker" – A showcase of Amari's work, including "She Had a Dream" and "Foreign Body," portraying strong female protagonists navigating societal challenges.

- "Loimata, The Sweetest Tears," a moving documentary from Samoa and New Zealand that follows a family's journey of healing and self-discovery
- "How to Sue the Klan," a timely and important film that explores a landmark civil rights case in the United States.

The Women's History Month film series is part of ADIFF's ongoing mission to promote cultural understanding and social justice through the power of cinema. By showcasing the works of women filmmakers from the African diaspora and beyond, the festival aims to broaden perspectives, challenge stereotypes, and inspire positive change.

Tickets for the series are available for purchase on the ADIFF website (nyadiff.org), with prices ranging from $11 to $16 per screening. A special weekend pass, which includes access to all films, is available for $45.

Teachers College students and staff can attend the screenings for free with a valid ID.
