

Emmy Award-Winning Filmmaker Takes a Stand for Child Safety in Schools with New Day Films

LOS ANGELES, CA, USA, March 19, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- New Day Films, a pioneer in providing impactful documentaries to educators, community groups, public libraries, and institutions, proudly announces the collaboration with Emmy Award-winning documentary filmmaker, Melody C. Miller. Known for her commitment to social issues, Miller joins New Day Films in advocating for child safety in schools with her documentary, California's Forgotten Children.

With a focus on telling the compelling stories of resilient individuals facing challenging circumstances, Melody C. Miller has directed and produced two award-winning feature documentaries that have left a meaningful impact. Among her notable works is "California's Forgotten Children," an influential documentary that sheds light on the critical issue of child sex trafficking. The film showcases the lives of survivors who overcame commercial sexual exploitation as children, emphasizing their dedication to ensuring no child is forgotten.

An award-winning feature documentary, the film has been utilized to train international staff to protect at-risk individuals and provide employment opportunities for survivor leaders. The film was honored at the United States Senate, the United State of Women's Summit, and the United Nations Association USA encouraging policymakers to create and implement laws and policies to combat trafficking. Miller has collaborated with schools, communities, governments, health services, and more, contributing to the creation of a trauma-informed guidebook accompanying the film. This guidebook has played a crucial role in supporting victims through crisis centers and police departments, as well as fundraising for safe-homes, and direct services.
