Carcinoid Tumor Overview

A carcinoid tumor is a type of neuroendocrine tumor that arises from the neuroendocrine cells. Neuroendocrine cells are specialized cells that have both nerve and hormone-producing functions. Carcinoid tumors can occur in various parts of the body, but they most commonly develop in the gastrointestinal tract, particularly in the appendix, small intestine, rectum, and stomach. However, they can also occur in the lungs and other organs.

Carcinoid tumors are typically slow-growing, and many are considered low-grade malignancies. However, they can still spread (metastasize) to other parts of the body, particularly the liver, as they progress. Carcinoid tumors can produce various hormones and bioactive substances, such as serotonin, that can cause a range of symptoms depending on their location and the substances they secrete.
