Practising English teachers, teach English in Ireland:

In all its years of running the EBC Trinity CertTESOL course, one of the main types of teacher trainees that EBC gets is practising teachers who need an official TEFL certificate to carry on teaching or to get a promotion.

Take Kristina, an EBC graduate from Croatia, for example. Having studied the English language, literature, and sociology as well as having earned a Master's in Education, she was a practising teacher for some time.

"I was teaching for about two, three years in a primary school and I did business English classes as well for about three years," she shared. "And then I moved to Ireland."

Practising English teachers need recognised certification:

Then, after taking some time off of teaching, she realised that she wanted to be back in the classroom. Kristina shared that she at first tried a different TEFL course, but then realised that it would not allow her to teach in Ireland. So, she looked for certification that is recognised in the country. This is when she found the EBC Trinity CertTESOL course.

"I started (a different course), and then I realised, 'Oh, this is so useless. It means nothing, like I can't even get a job in any of the schools in Ireland.' But then I came across this (the EBC Trinity CertTESOL course) and it really suited me because it was online. I'm hoping to do maybe some teaching in person and some online, so I was really interested in taking this course."

"I think it's time now to return to teaching. So I was like 'Whoa. What could I do?' And I realised that in Ireland, I think this Trinity CertTESOL and I think there was another one or two that are recognised."

Practising English teachers, teach English in Hong Kong:

The same can be said for another recent application interview EBC conducted with a practising teacher in Hong Kong who needed the Trinity CertTESOL to join the NET scheme where schools in the public education sector require their teachers to have a Trinity CertTESOL to be able to teach in public schools.

What is the NET scheme? It is a programme that has been launched by the Hong Kong Education Bureau to develop English language education. The initiative allows native-speaking English teachers and local teachers in Hong Kong's public school system to work together to help students improve their English.

Under this programme, a lot of importance is given to the skills and effectiveness of English teachers. This is why practising teachers who wish to join the NET scheme need the Trinity CertTESOL certificate.

Course benefits that practising English teachers will love:

Besides being a ticket to success in the TEFL world, the EBC Trinity CertTESOL certificate also comes with a big plus. The lifetime, worldwide job placement programme is exclusive to EBC graduates, and makes it easy for English teachers to find English teaching jobs all around the world.
