Region-wise, Asia-Pacific was the largest market in 2021 and had the highest market share of 33.1%. The sales of glassware by end-user are increasing at a significant rate in Asia-pacific, owing to the rise in disposable income, and changes in lifestyles in developing countries such as China, India, and others. In Asia-Pacific, China is the largest producer of glassware which is the leading driver for the Asia-Pacific market. The demand for glassware is growing rapidly in the food service industry as well as in households. With the increase in demand for glassware, manufacturers in the Asia-Pacific region are investing in research and development to develop cost-effective and durable glassware.

By price point, the glassware market is categorized into premium, medium, and economy. The glass jars segment led the market and accounted for 39.9% of the global glassware market in 2021 and is expected to maintain its dominance during the forecast period. Mid-range glassware has a collection of different glass products as most consumers prefer mid-range products that are good in quality and slightly inexpensive. As most consumers are mid-range buyers, this segment offers many products to attract the population. Moreover, the mid-range is the only section that every glassware manufacturing brand and company targets as it generates most of the revenue. The e-commerce sector also plays a major role in the segment as it provides large varieties of glassware products at affordable prices.

According to the insights of CXOs of leading companies, the glassware market holds a substantial scope for growth; however, its contribution to the world market would increase significantly within the next six years. Glassware is versatile as they are used in, hotels and restaurants, corporate canteens, café and bars, and others. However, recent innovations and development in glassware production are expected to create new opportunities in this booming sector. Several players are entering the market with innovative designs, cost-effective products, and durable products which are expected to fuel the growth of the market. Moreover, the increase in investment in the food service industry is expected to create opportunities for glassware manufacturers in the upcoming years.
