Curl up with a cup of hot tea. This March, we are highlighting engrossing literary fiction novels by New York authors Ukachi Uwadinobi and Reese T. Lightfoot

NEW YORK, NEW YORK, UNITED STATES, March 26, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- In The Devil Catches Butterflies by Reese T. Lightfoot, Phoebe Graham was just a young woman in her late 20's living the oh-so-normal life of a copy editor for a crappy publisher in the Big Apple. Like many before her, Phoebe dreamed of one day publishing her own novel. But the pressures of stale work and a boring life make reality a living writer's block...at least that is until life takes a puzzling series of turns.

But the weirdness doesn't stop there. Somehow, Phoebe has been possessed by a familiar face that comes with unfamiliar consequences. Now thrust into a world of witchcraft, demons, magic and mysteries, Phoebe may finally get the material she needs for that novel she'd been dreaming about... as long as she can manage to somehow stay alive.

What did Collette Durand, a beautiful 38-year-old French widow find in the life of a young black prisoner of war, roughly half her age that turned her humanitarian mission in a Nigerian military prison into a secret affair, that threatened to explode into an international scandal in the middle of a civil war?

She had moved to Africa to find a new purpose for her life after the tragic loss of her Caucasian French husband in a ghastly auto accident in Paris, France. But what she found instead, became an alluring mystery that defied logic, even for the young Biafra POW, Udochukwu Abara, caught in the middle of a blurry line between the compassion and passion of a widow. In his twisted ordeal in captivity, his fate hangs precariously in the balance, as the strange new relationship takes a dramatic turn resulting in episodic tentacles stretching across the Continents of Africa and Europe neither of them could foresee. The mysteries of love in an unfamiliar terrain for both of them is a long journey without a known destination. Where and how it ends is a riveting conundrum of war, inter-racial tension, and the raw emotions of the human heart.

In the 1960s, a widow finds herself falling in love with prisoner of war in a love story that spans across the continents of Africa and Europe in this powerfully romantic drama.”
