The IASP's Asia Pacific Conference, held in Bangkok from 3 – 6 Jun '24 provides a focus for challenges to preventing suicides in the Region.

WASHINGTON DC, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, March 27, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The International Association for Suicide Prevention's Asia Pacific Conference, to be held in Bangkok from 3rd – 6th June 2024 will provide a focus for challenges to preventing suicides in the Asia Pacific Region.

The 11th Asia Pacific Conference aims to foster collaboration, innovation, and knowledge exchange among stakeholders in the region to address the unique challenges of suicide prevention within the diverse cultural and societal contexts of the region.

The Asia Pacific Region consists of around 45 countries and is a melting pot of cultures and religions and has 40-50% of suicides globally. Thailand is well placed to offer a unique perspective in addressing these challenges. According to the Department of Mental Health, Ministry of Public Health, the suicide rate in Thailand in 2022, was recorded as 7.97 per 100,000 population.(1) During the crisis of COVID-19, the suicide rate was not remarkably high due to the close collaboration of all parties concerned.

Thailand has a suicide prevention strategy of educating health workers and increasing the number of health workers, especially psychiatrists. Preventive measures include; providing knowledge to general physicians, monks, teachers, and health care volunteers, raising awareness on social media, reducing stigma, conducting research and collaborating with other organizations worldwide. A National Suicide Prevention Center and a Mental Health Working Group also focus on suicide prevention with representatives from various ministries and associations coming to work together.

Regional identity and cooperation is core to the conference and a move away from a predominantly western focus is key to identifying the challenges in the region and the work and approaches to suicide prevention taking place.

Enhancing regional capacity will support the development of skills, resources, and infrastructure for suicide prevention within the Asia Pacific region, empowering evidence informed effective strategies tailored to their specific contexts.

In addition, highlighting the diverse perspectives through the conference programme, including religions, cultures, first nations and indigenous communities and other groups aims to ensure inclusive and sensitive responses to suicide prevention challenges in the region.
