Aromatherapy Oils (more commonly referred to as essential oils) are highly concentrated liquids containing volatile aroma compounds from plants that contribute distinctive fragrances of each essential oil. Many believe essential oils have therapeutic benefits that provide holistic healing benefits; aromatherapy utilizes them to increase physical, mental, and emotional well-being while their pleasant scents aid relaxation and stress reduction, among many other potential health advantages.

Extracting essential oils involves various plant parts, such as flowers, leaves, bark, stems, and roots. Distillation, expression or solvent extraction techniques may be employed in their extraction; each essential oil possesses unique properties with potential health advantages and applications beyond enhancing mood enhancement alone.
