empowering and supporting the military member and their family as they navigate the military to civilian transition. This may include residual challenges associated with unaccompanied assignments and deployments. Its mission is to strengthen personal, professional and family readiness by providing tailored programs and resources in an integrated community environment.

Embrace the Brave will officially kick off programming at its inaugural weekend, which will take place from July 12-14th at the Washington Duke Inn in Durham, North Carolina. Up to 20 families will benefit from the weekend’s diverse programming, which includes interactive workshops and seminars that focus on addressing the unique challenges that come with military to civilian transition, as well as opportunities to promote family bonding through fun-filled activities such as outdoor adventures, sports, and relaxation. The goal of the weekend is to equip families with valuable coping strategies, communication techniques, and tools to help navigate post-deployment challenges while fostering resilience and love by reconnecting families and strengthening their family bond. Support and counseling will be available throughout the weekend, where military members and their families can receive professional guidance on health, stress management, and building stronger family connections.

Thiran developed Embrace the Brave to meaningfully give back to America’s service people beyond providing cutting-edge technological systems to the military throughout his career.

“By offering specialized resources and activities designed to facilitate reintegration, we aim to address the unique needs of military families and promote healthy relationships,” says Thiran. “I look forward to hosting our inaugural weekend this summer and empowering military members at this critical, yet often under supported, point in their service.”
