Peripheral T-cell Lymphoma Overview

Peripheral T-cell lymphomas (PTCLs) are an uncommon and heterogeneous group of clinically aggressive types of non-Hodgkin lymphoma (NHL) that develop in mature white blood cells called "T cells" and "natural killer (NK) cells." It is PTCL's origin in the lymphatic system that gave it the name peripheral T-cell lymphoma. In the case of PTCL, the term "peripheral" does not refer to the extremities, but identifies PTCL as cancer that arises in the lymphoid tissues outside of the bone marrow such as lymph nodes, spleen, gastrointestinal tract, and skin.
