Red wine is a wine with a primarily red color that results from the natural pigment found in the peels of dark-colored grapes during fermentation. The alcohol content of red wine is typically between 12 -15%. Antioxidants abound in red wine, and moderate consumption is good for health.

The main types of red wines are sparkling red wine and still red wine. The sparkling red wine has a reddish hue which is obtained when grape juice comes into contact with the grape skins of red grape strains. Depending on the variety, sparkling red wines range in taste from very dry to semi-sweet and in color from deep rose to inky-red. The red wines are packed in bottles, and cans and are distributed through food services and retail stores.
